

KREINDLER LAW FIRM

Has a family member been injured in an aircraft accident?

This shouldn't have happened.

We expect air travel to be safe. So when we read about disasters in the news, it shakes our confidence, even though it happened to 'other people.' It seems especially unfair that this time, someone you care about happened to be in on board, involved, and injured.

The main priority now, of course, is their medical treatment and recovery. No doubt they are in good hands, and you are following their prognosis and progress closely.

In the meantime, you have questions.

You want to understand how this terrible event happened, how it could have happened. You and your family have a right to ask, and to know, to try to make sense of it all.

Of course, you want whoever is responsible to take responsibility. What is done, can't be undone. But every victim has a right to see that justice is ultimately served.

Plus, there are practical considerations.

Families in your circumstance find themselves with the same day-to-day financial obligations, but may now be faced with the loss of the injured person's income. Plus insurance may not cover all the costs, and you know how quickly those can add up.

Amidst the confusion, you want to make the right decisions, for yourself and your loved one. But perhaps you're not quite sure where to turn, or even what the options are.

You won't have to face your challenges alone.

Thousands of others families have researched law firms to represent them after an aviation accident, and arrived at the same conclusion: none come close to Kreindler. In the following pages, you'll find out why.

Since 1950, no other attorneys have provided more families with answers, justice, closure, and awards that help ensure financial security. When you can have the one team that's tough enough to take on powerful interests on your behalf, your first decision should be an easy one.
